Inspired by her grandfather, and the beauty of the royal Jadau designs, Jyotsna Singh started her personal brand of semi-precious jewelry, Manjusha, meaning "treasure chest of jewels." Singh's innovative methods of blending generations of intricate designs with comfortable materials render her pieces more wearable and affordable than many others on the market today. Her collection is unique, yet versatile enough so that it is admired by people from all walks of life. From handcrafted Necklaces and Sterling Silver Earrings to 22 Carat Gold Plated Bracelets and Cuffs, Manjusha's collection continues to expand, and many of her natural gemstones can be found for sale in prestigious museum stores around the world.

MAHARAJA OF PATIALA

Jyotsna Singh gets her guiding light when designing jewelry from her grandfather, Sir Bhupinder Singh, the Maharaja of Patiala from 1900 to 1938. Sir Bhupinder Singh had an affinity with exquisite jewelry. He owned the world's seventh largest diamond (De Beers) that became part of the renowned ceremonial necklace known as the Patiala. The Patiala Necklace contained 2,930 diamonds in addition to several Burmese rubies. The $125 million necklace disappeared in the year 1948, but then reappeared in 1998, with many of its jewels missing. Cartier, the original designer, purchased the piece and restored it to resemble the original.
